The Committee denies the allegations and states that it had measures in place to handle excessive contributions properly. The Committee suggests the Complainant does not understand that the primary and general elections are separate elections for purposes of limitations on contributions, and that committees may cure excessive contributions by timely redesignating, reallocating, or refunding them. The Committee explains that 64 of the 70 contributors did not exceed the contribution limits at all, and four individuals made excessive contributions that the Committee timely refunded or reallocated. The Committee maintains that two individuals appeared to exceed the $2,700 per election limit, but this appearance was due to reporting errors, which the Committee corrected in amended reports.

B. Legal Analysis

Under the Act, an individual may not make a contribution to a candidate with respect to any election in excess of the legal limit, which was $2,700 per election during the 2016 election cycle. A primary election and a general election are each considered a separate "election" under the Act, and the contribution limits apply separately to each election. Candidates and political committees are prohibited from knowingly accepting excessive contributions. When a committee receives an excessive contribution, the committee must, within 60 days of the contribution's receipt, either refund the excessive portion of the contribution or obtain a redesignation or reattribution from the contributor. Contributions to a joint fundraising committee are subject to regulations governing the allocation of funds up to the total limits of all the participants to the joint fundraising agreement.

A review of the Committee's disclosure reports confirms that 64 of the 70 identified individuals did not make excessive contributions, and five more made excessive contributions that the Committee timely refunded, redesignated, or reallocated. However, the Committee failed to timely refund, redesignate, or reallocate excessive contributions totaling $845 from one individual.<sup>15</sup>

Given the limited scope of the violation, the small amount at issue, and the Committee's remedial actions, and the Commission's priorities, relative to other matters pending on the

The Committee's reports reveal that one contributor exceeded the aggregate contribution limit for the primary election by $845 via contributions to HVF on Feb. 5, 2016; Feb 24, 2016; Feb. 29, 2016; and Mar. 11, 2016. The excessive contributions were reallocated on Jul. 31, 2016.
